D.S.-READING ROOM

Strathcona

Strathcona means different things for various people. For some it is a place to meet in between games of pool, for others it provides an inspiration for worldly knowledge. Yet for most it is a meeting place to learn to understand people and to learn to understand themselves.

"Strathcona" is dedicated this year to our former principal Mr. C. S. Wilkie. Mr. Wilkie left Scona this year after nine years of devoted service, which Sconaites have greatly appreciated. Besides the numerous contributions to the school, Mr. Wilkie volunteered much of his spare time to extracurricular activities. He left behind an atmosphere of warmth and gratitude and we hope that his new post is as fulfilling.

Greetings to all the wonderful students and teachers at Strathcona. Congratulations and appreciation to our yearbook staff for producing a fine souvenir of our many memorable times together.

It is indeed a great honor to have this book dedicated to me. My contributions have been so small and my rewards so great. No one could find a happier, more responsible, wonderful community of young people. Always you will be in my heart — in my eyes — and in my ears.

I hope that you will approach the future with eager anticipation. "Grumpy", that delightful character in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs was a little too gloomy when he observed, "I've been telling you for nigh on three hundred years that something awful was about to happen!"

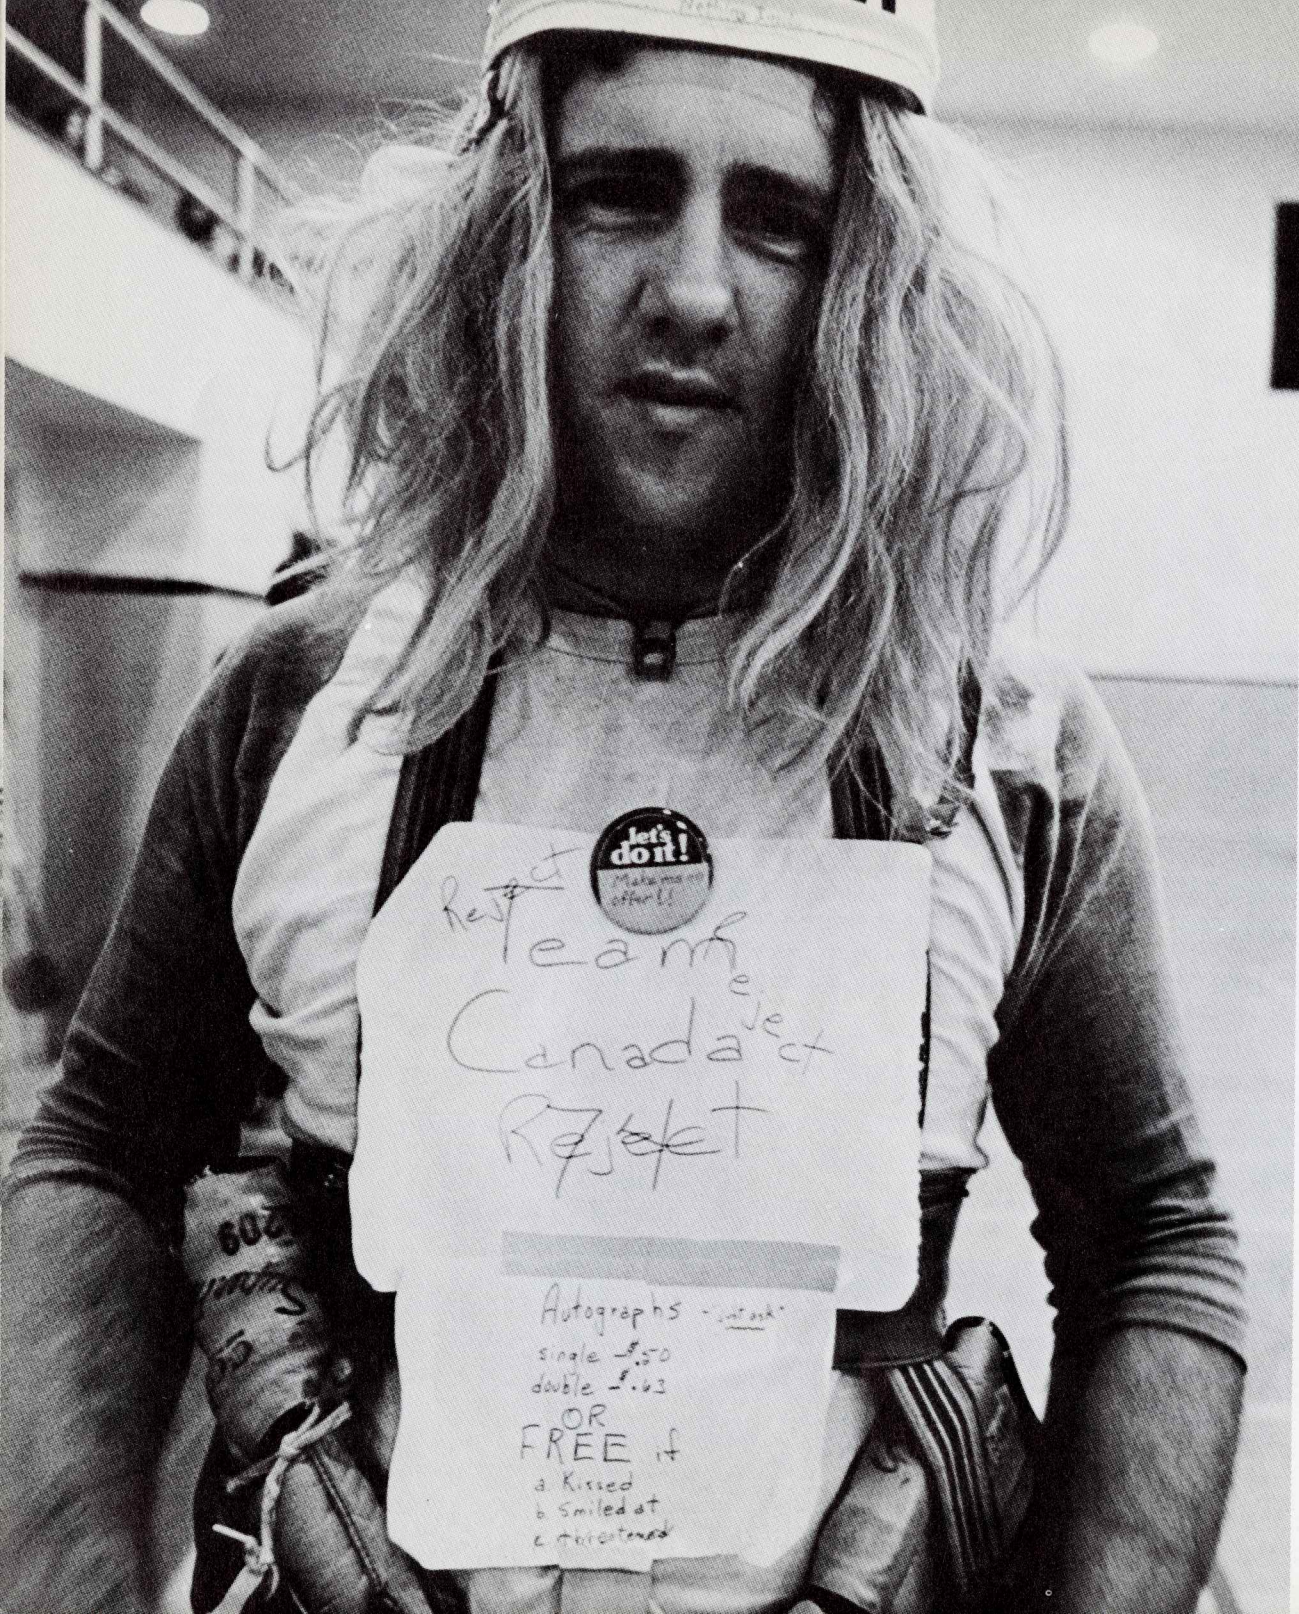

The point is that although you face frightening problems you do have the creative ability to be a part of the solution. There is every indication that you will meet the challenges of the future as successfully as our former graduates who have so distinguished themselves in all fields of endeavour.

Many years ago, a man, who later became quite famous, wrote to a group of people in Ephesus. He explained various things to them and then said — "We struggle against many things —, Therefore, take on the whole armour of God that you may be able to stand. Stand with your feet shod with peace, with your loins girt about with the truth, and have on the breastplate of righteousness. Above all take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit."

A message is there for all of us.

Best wishes to all and thank you for picking up the garbage, even though it was not always your own!!

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The past three years spent at Scona have been very happy ones for me and I hope, for all of you. The position of President has been challenging and satisfying, and has given me the opportunity of working with a very fine executive. As an executive we hope that you have enjoyed the program of activities we have endeavored to provide this year.

To the administration, to the office staff, and to the teachers we give our thanks for all their co-operation, encouragement and help.

To the student body, your enthusiasm, support and great school spirit have kept Scona where it has always been — on top!

It would be fun if we could all meet, twenty years from now, and relive our Scona Days. Until then, good luck and farewell.

CLASS HISTORY 1975

ALAN NURSALL

"You knucklehead!" These and many other famous and profound sayings have been uttered by the numerous esteemed educators who have been our guiding lights for the past three years at our beloved alma mater. They accepted us, naive and helpless infants, unaware of the ways of the big cruel world of grade ten. Now they have molded us into dynamic and mighty pillars of knowledge and strength, ready to take on the world. But so much for them.

Our time at Scona is drawing to a close and we all have many fond and some not-so-fond memories. After ducking and dodging our way through Frosh Week, sitting through four editions of "Know Your Library" from Mr. Sharples, and negotiating the stairs in the smoking area for the first time, we figured we had it made. We were in the big time, as they say.

Athletic events never failed to entertain as we watched our football, basketball, track, and yes, let's not forget water polo, teams led by coaches Belmont, Wright, and Durrresne, etc., tear apart their opposition. And who could forget the rousing fan support led by the unsinkable pair of Lederer and Fritz.

One of the special attractions this past year was the four-team invitational basketball tournament which proved to be an enormous success, even though the hometown Lords failed to tuck away the hardware, being dashed in their efforts by the Centaurs from Coquitlam. Jay Bowen also brought honor upon the school as he brought the Haliburton Trophy back to Scona where it so rightly belongs and Ian Newhouse never failed to impress as he set numerous provincial records on the track team.

Dances were always a favorite with the students — the greaser dance, the Sadie Hawkins dance, and last but not least, the Christmas formal! Never before had so many able-bodied young men and women been rendered so helpless as by the murderous foxtrot or the intricacies of the chacha, or trying to dance through the excruciating pain caused by those awful shoes.

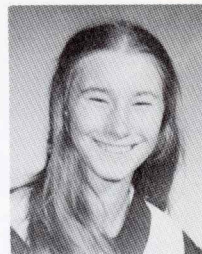

We saw the annual winter games get started at Scona and they proved to be an event as much fun to watch as to participate in.

The arts fared well at Scona as the drama department entertained us with plays such as "Death Takes A Holiday" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream". Kevin Lewis won awards in creative writing as did Janet Forster, Laura Williamson, and Natalie Murray in art. Several Sconites won the right to travel on exchanges to such far off places as Germany and Japan, and the First Annual Scona Talent Show uncovered two great new supergroups — "Tootsie and the Groovy Twosome" and "Freddy and the Froglets".

We also got to enjoy a whole set of new facilities as the school received a facelift. The halls were brightened, a new track was installed, and the science labs were improved and updated to allow students to delve further into the laws of nuclear explosions and mating habits of grizzly bears. No deaths have been reported so far.

Our grad class witnessed the introduction of a new principal to our school. Mr. Wilkie finished a successful term at Scona with a promotion to Assistant Superintendent of the Edmonton Public School Board and Mr. Nixon did a more than adequate job of filling his shoes and will continue to do so in years to come, I'm sure.

In closing, I say that these past three years and the nine before them have been the major factor in our lives until now and the memories and highlights of our experiences here will remain with us for many years to come. Thank you.

VALEDICTORY 1975

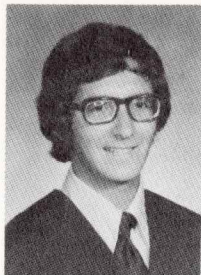

NATALIE MURRAY

As our dear Mr. Yeske keeps reminding me: "Triumph begins with try". The fact that we, the graduates, are here tonight should be evident enough that we have triumphed. We have endured twelve long years of school and survived the times of drudgery, of fun, and most of the times in between. During this time, we were, supposedly, gaining the maturity, responsibility, and experience required to prepare us to embark independently into the modern world. But by this time, most of us have either developed an affectionate, even sentimental feeling for our school, or at least assumed an air of tender tolerance. This creates the present dilemma I must voice now — bidding Strathcona farewell.

Most goodbyes are painful and for many of us, although we'd never admit it, this farewell is no exception. Good-bye is accompanied by the mingled feelings of regret and pleasure. Who will ever forget Gaylord, the dances, our cheerleaders and our high caliber of sports, drama, and academics, not to mention certain members of the teaching staff? On the other hand, who is not looking forward to living the life of which each of us has dreamed and planned? Now we can finally pursue these goals, as our departure from Scona symbolizes the shedding of childhood and taking up the role of adulthood. Realms of unlimited potential and endless opportunity spread out before us: continued education, careers, travel, marriage and even collecting welfare, are just a few of the possibilities. We are faced with a challenge — the challenge of choice. Hopefully, however, we will take up the burden that is rightfully ours and make responsible rather than selfish choices.

Being forced into the practical, impersonal and sometimes seemingly unfeeling world may prove to be a shocking disappointment. But when faced with the realities of the sudden submergence into responsibility and independent decision, I feel confident we will take up the fight with a vigorous response, as we are the younger generation, and we can, and what is more, will improve where preceding generations have failed. It is true our generation has been burdened with the greatest problem man has yet faced, that is the problem of preserving our species. It may sometimes seem that self destruction is inevitable, especially in view of the nuclear threat, overpopulation, world famine, and pollution: but remember that "triumph begins with try".

We are youth. We are the dreamers, the idealists, and the doers, who can make of this world what we will. We can no longer complain about sad states of affairs for it is now up to you, fellow graduates, and to me to effect the desired changes. If we fail, I am confident it will not be for a lack of 'try'.

Once I was six

Do you remember it?

The Crocodile King

It's hot. The heat ripples up from the melting tar road, the peeling metal cars, the aging house-trailers, and you. But you're not defenceless; you've got a loaded hose, and you brandish it fiercely. You've fought hard most of the morning and, even though greatly outnumbered, you've usually managed to take the offensive, only having had to fall back to headquarters a few times. But it's now after one and the forces of heat are stepping up their attack, increasing to a hundred, a hundred and one, two, three. Things are starting to look bad, the large areas of land you had drowned and defeated are quickly being reclaimed. The enemy always recovers from the most serious wounds, while you don't. Early in the day you tripped on your own weapon and badly damaged a knee, which forced a retreat for medical aid. Since then there have been other cuts and scrapes, but most serious of all is the general battle fatigue. Maybe the whole campaign should be abandoned. Everyone agrees and so that's that, but it must end on a winning note. You open the nozzle on the hose all the way and launch the final attack, indiscriminately spraying road, cars, and trailers as you slowly back towards the faucet. It's unlikely that the enemy will think that you're about to quit, so this is the best time. Reach the tap, turn it off, and now weaponless, run to the trailer.

Inside is worse. You sit in the couch at the head of it all and sweat, as Mom and Dad move around in the cramped Sahara. Robbie, your big brother, tells you that while you were out it was decided that today was a day to go swimming. You drippingly agree, and then help get things ready, but soon discover that your bathing suit has run off with a towel without even bothering to tell you. You track him down and go to the bathroom to change.

By the time you finish everyone else is ready, and you marvel at how Superman can do it so fast. A final check, yes something has been forgotten, then out the doors. The Man of Steel gallops ahead and reaches the old Ford first but you burn your hand on the car-door, so you give it up and wait for the others.

The drive is short but eventful. You spot a deer grazing by the side of the road that no one else does; though Robbie claims he saw it too, but you're sure he's lying.

The river is actually more of a stream; but since the difference between the two has never been clear, this is a river. You are the only people at this part of it, which is nice, and you rush to be the first one in, which you are. You sit with a pleased sense of accomplishment, surrounded by your new possession. You're rather peeved when the other three come in and swim out beyond your depth, but that's how it goes. You have to be content with being ruler of the shallows, and so you begin to travel through the kingdom. Pulling yourself along the bottom with your hands, you float with your head submerged to the eyes. You're obviously a crocodile. Rebellious subjects are eaten, but you shed a tear for each one; you really are a kind king. You spend most of your time building high rock walls near the border to keep out the things of the depths and you do this yourself, no forced labour for your people. You work hard on your defences, but it's all in vain. Two giants crash through the countryside, unconscious of the destruction they cause. You rush to the area, but it's too late and there's little you can do. You get over it and continue on with your work.

You're very involved in matters of state and not bothering with anything else. Mom and Dad have gone back to the car to dry off and change and are now sitting in the sand watching the two of you.

Robbie is still swimming. The river has a waterfall at this place and there's a large, deep pool that it's dug for itself. One lone rock has refused to budge and stands victorious and lonely in the water near the fall. Robbie is splashing through the water; he's only nine and not a graceful swimmer. He's conquering the pool and claiming it as his own; he's got as far as the rock and is resting. He must still defeat the ferocious waterfall. He let's go of the rock and challenges it.

A small piece of bark drifts in a set pattern in the pool. The falling water acts as a whirlpool, drawing the water around it inwards. The bark is pulled in, forced under and away, and then comes up and begins again. Eventually it will break free but right now it is on another circuit towards the fall, and so is Robbie. They both go under. Robbie comes up gasping and surprised. He's swallowed water and is panicky, grabbing for the rock, he slips off. He goes under again.

Everyone cheers, the outer defences are finished and the land is safe. Now you can concentrate on improving the country, start some farming. Someone yells, someone real — your brother. You look out to the falls, but you can't see anything. Now everyone's shouting and you turn around and see Dad running towards you with all his clothes on. He's through the shallows in a few strides and then out into the pool. You jump up. You can see Robbie now by the falls, then Dad's there and bringing him in. He carries Robbie out onto the beach and you rush after them, only now becoming afraid. But he's all right, he's telling them he is, as Mom and Dad hold him. You stop; you don't want to see it. It shouldn't have happened, it's not right, it doesn't fit; you want to cry. You run back to your water.

Concentrating on your domain, you patrol the border examining defenses with your reptile eyes. Then you see something, a cigarette, your Dad's cigarettes that were in his pocket, floating by one at a time. The procession passes through the realm, and you watch each one as it's caught by the current and bobs away. The last invader passes out of sight and you turn away murmuring to yourself, "I'm Kevin the Crocodile King."

—Kevin Lewis, first prize short story.

Flashing Imagery

A whisking, Whizzing, waltzing whirl.
A giddy pandemonium of people.
The stagnancy of those unsure,
Apathy rising like a steeple.

The wildlife rate of change,
Torrents of new information.
Technology's expanding range,
An ambitious and aspiring nation.

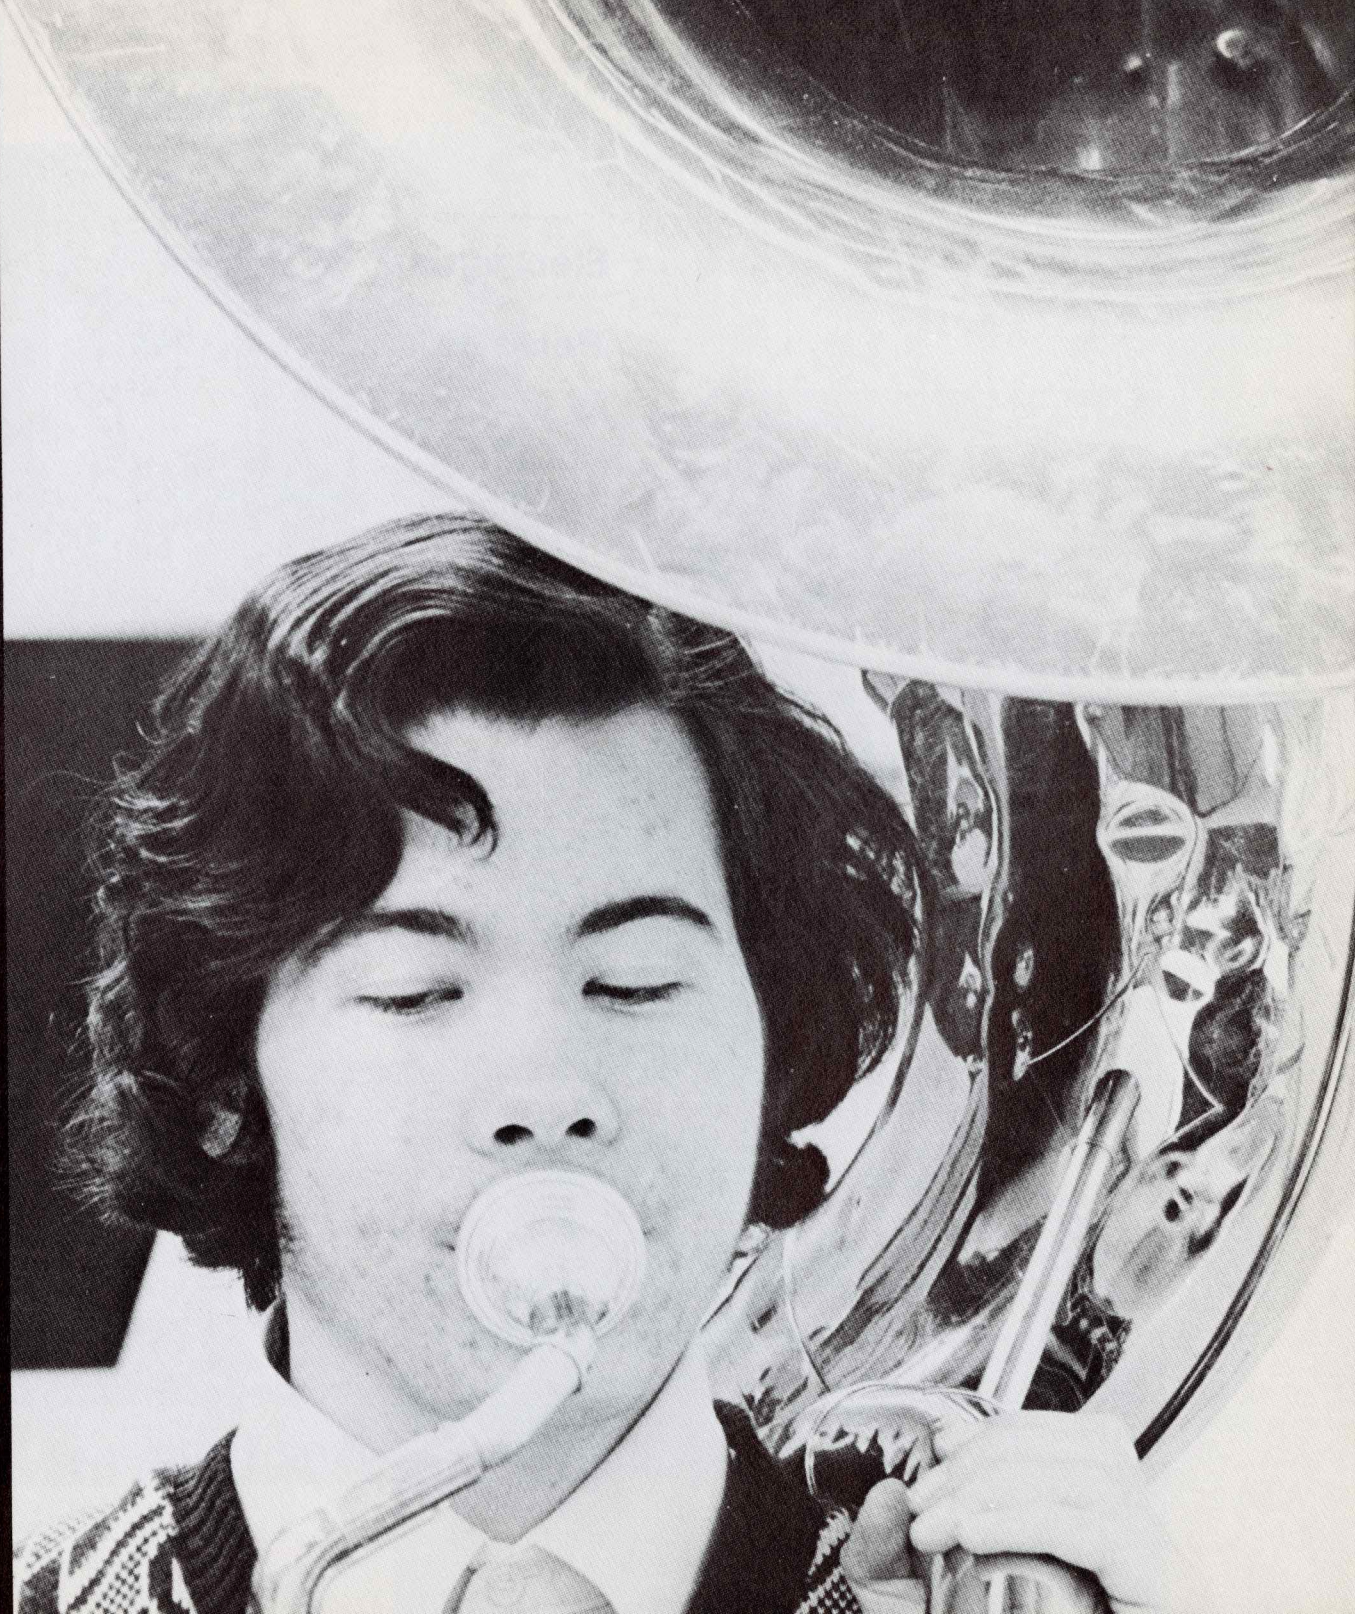

Flashing imagery of the worlds design,
No goals, no aims, just targets.
Those benumbed are forced to resign,
From are superficial people markets.

Belching smoke stacks herald gloom.
Cities with their break neck pace.
Bringing the inevitable, on-coming doom.
Think what's in store for the human race.

—Maureen Crawford, second prize poetry.
